Rainier Diversifying Monaco Inc. Gambling and Fairy-Tale Image Take a Back Seat

By James M. Markham

MONACO — The chief executive officer of Monaco Inc. was urbanely pushing the merits of his ancient enterprise, which occupies a tiny but choice piece of Mediterranean seaside property. "There's solidity and continuity," argued Prince Rainier III, who is about to celebrate the 40th year of his reign. "After all, it's been a family business for 700 years. That's quite a long time." Six years after his wife, Princess Grace, died in an auto accident in the twisting hills above Monaco, the fairy-tale days are pretty much over. Since it discovered the lure of gambling a century ago, the postcard principality has been dedicated to amassing wealth, but Prince Rainier has sought to modernize and diversify its sources of income "All right, this coast will always attract some shady people — a sunny spot for shady people," he mused, retrieving one of the oldest cliches about a place that has attracted its quotient of low-living high-rollers and that thrives as a tax haven for personalities as varied as Placido Domingo and

Boris Becker. "But I think that's giramicky," continued the prince, conversing in English in his extremely modest and somewhat cluttered office at his gingerbread-colored palace. "I think now the image is very good. We're taken seriously."

Monaco Inc. - the appellation is fictional but often heard in conversation here - is no longer a one-industry concern. Gambling today accounts for less than 4 percent of Monaco's $300 million annual budget. More than half of its revenue comes from value-added taxes on horels, banks and light industries.

The titled glitterati of yore - White Russian dukes and duchesses, English lords and swash-buckling oil sheikhs — can still be found, but they are gradually being displaced by a less racy crowd of business executives and, in the off-season, participants in conventions and tours. ## 3 Whales Galvanize World Media

By Sherry Simpson Washington Post Service

BARROW, Alaska -- Under an electric green banner of Northern Lights, three icebound gray whales surfaced in a small, dark pool of slushy water. A bitter wind snatched their spume away into the night as a dozen reporters, biologists and rescuers impdiled around the pool, concentrating on efforts to install de-icers in the water.

The humans seemed almost oblivious to the whales who bobbed gently in the water, lighted by the headlamps of snowmobiles. The scene seemed remote from the international attention focused on this 20- by 24-foot (6- by 7-meters) pool. In Barrow, eight miles (13 kilometers) away, there were reporters from as far away as Australia. Japan and Britain who descended this week on the town of 3,500, which in normal times is populated mostly by Impiat Eskimos. The interlopers have settled for cots in hotel hallways and are scrambling for rides on helicopters, airplanes and snowmobiles to reach the whales.

At the North Slope Borough's Search and Rescue Center, the phone bleats nonstop as journalists call for updates and interviews.

Somewhere in the onslaught, some rescners and observers say, this effort to rescue three whales among the dozens that die this way each winter reached the point of no return. The pressure to

Shamir Criticizes Appearance Of Peres and Hussein on TV

By Glenn Frankel

Washington Post Service JERUSALEM - Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir denounced as "damaging and harmful" on Friday an appearance by Shimon Peres and King Hussein of Jordan on American television.

The two major parties in Israel sought to assess the impact of the event on the parliamentary election campaign here.

Mr. Peres, who is foreign minister and head of the left-of-center Labor Party, retaliated by accusing Mr. Shamir's rightist Likud party of "panicking because Israel now has a partner for peace."

"Every time we make a move toward peace." Mr. Peres said, "the Likud tries to destroy it. The accusations followed sepa-

"The Israeli voter needs to understand when he goes to the ballot box that we have a real negotiating partner in Hussein," a senior For-

Mr. Shamir himself issued a

"It is important to remember that, in the future, King Hussein will be Israel's negotiating partner for peace," the statement said, "and therefore his being pulled into the election campaign is damaging and harmful."

King Hussein called Mr. Peres's proposal of an international conference "a welcome development" and "a step forward." But he re-fused to commit himself to anything beyond consulting with the Palestine Liberation Organization to determine if it would be interested in reviving the idea of a joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation.

Manila Has Marcos Dilemma

Charging Former Dictator Would Allow Him to Return

By Keith B. Richburg

Washington Past Service MANILA - As a U.S. grand jury indicted former President Ferdinand E. The problem for the Aquino government is a constitutional provison prohibiting any Filipino from being criminally tried in his ab-sence. Once Mr. Marcos is formally charged with a crime, he will have the right to return to the Philippines to defend himself.

On the other hand, until criminal charges are filed in Manila, anthorities in Switzerland have said they cannot give Philippine investigators access to records on Mr. Marcos's Swiss bank accounts, which are believed to contain more than $1 billion that the former dictator looted from government coffers during his 22-year rule.

Francisco Chavez, the Philippine oliciter-general, said last week that Mr. Marcos would "definitely" be charged, and allowed to come home, within six months. He also said he expected to begin filing criminal charges against some of Mr. Marcos's political cronies even

But Mr. Chavez said his timetable for filing corruption charges may depend on evidence contained in the Swiss bank records, evidence the Swiss government has said he cannot see until after the criminal

The government has already filed 39 separate civil suits against Mr. Marcos, seeking a total of $96.7 billion in damages. But with civil suits, defendants do not have an automatic right to be present to face their accusers.

Behind the national fascination with Mr. Marcos are some serious financial concerns: The Aquino government is counting on recovering the billions that he stole to help erase the country's $28 billion for-eign debt and fund badly needed social programs and development projects, such as a newly passed agrarian reform act.

Hostages Threatened After Israeli Air Attacks

BEIRUT — Israeli bombers

blasted pro-Iranian Hezbollah strongholds in the Syrian-held Bekaa Valley and Palestinian bases in southern Lebanon on Friday, kill-ing nine people and provoking a threat by Islamic Jihad to punish

The warning by Islamic Jihad, an Iran-backed group, was accompa-nied by a photograph of a missing American journalist, Terry A. Anderson, kidnapped in Beirut on March 16, 1985. 'America, the criminal, should know that it will not come out unscathed from this act, especially regarding the fate of hostages we are holding," Islamic Jihad said. It asserted that the United States had a responsibility by association in the air raids because of its close ties to Israel.

"The commission of such folly and aggression will not pass un-punished," Islamic Jihad added. Israeli planes swooped low over the town of Machenara in the southern Bekaa Valley at mid-morning and struck the main Hezbollah headquarters and a clinic run by the fundamentalists. The casualty toll was six dead, including a four-year-old boy, and 20 wounded, according to hospital and security sources. Israeli jets also fired rockets at the village of Ain Tinch, near Machghara, missing a Hezbollah office but demolishing a house, witnesses said.

Sheikh Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah , Lebanon's leading Shi-ite cleric, criticized Israel in a sermon Friday, saying the Lebanese had hit a military target with precision, but the Israelis could do no better than harm civilians.

A Life Devoted To Wealth

The Associated Press NEW YORK — Adnan Khashoggi, the Saudi busi-nessman indicted Friday on racketeering charges along with Ferdinand and Imeida Marcos, has led an entrepreneurial life dedicated to the accumulation of speciacular wealth and the cultivation of contacts worldwide.

For years, he hopped from nt to continent in his own DC-8. He reportedly had huxury homes in 10 cities. Recently, however, he has also been dogged by controversy and financial problems.

Mr. Khashoggi, 53, is the son of a physician to the Saudi royal family. He has acted as a broker between the West and Sandi Arabia, using his royal connections, and has served as a major conduit for military materiel bound for Sandi Arabia. In 1986, it was revealed that he had brokered the U.S.-Iran arms deal that was at the heart of the Iran-contra affair. Mr. Khashoggi claimed that he lost $10 million on the deal.

Serbs Hold Rallies to Back Milosevic

BELGRADE (AP) - Tens of thousands of Serbs rallied Friday to protest the outcome of a Communist Party meeting this week as the Yugoslav parliament debated a series of economic and constitutional changes. "It shames South Africa that the state president has stooped to make personal attacks on me," Chief Buthelezi told the KwaZulu legislature. This is absolutely disgraceful personality assassination." The government has tried repeatedly in recent years to draw Mr. Buthelezi into negotiations on limited power-sharing with blacks.

Belgium Opposes NATO Arms Move

BRUSSELS (Reuters) --- Belgium has decided to oppose NATO moves to push through a quick agreement to modernize the alliance's short-range nuclear weapons, government sources said Friday.

They said the decision, made by a cabinet committee Thursday, placed Belgium behind West Germany and on a collision course with the United, States and Britain in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's mostdivisive internal debate.

A senior government source said that Belgium was not saying it would, never agree to modernization, but was replying to a NATO request to endorse the recommendation to modernize ahead of a meeting next week. of NATO defense ministers.

For the Record

A bomb explosion at a South African polling station Friday killed a baby girl and wounded four of her family, the police said. A police spokesman said a Soviet-made magnetic limpet mine was planted in a public toilet at the civic center in the black township of KwaThema, about 12 miles (20 kilometers) east of Johannesburg. Four men and two women have been found guilty by a Brussels court of staging two separate terrorist bomb campaigns in Belgium that killed two Brussels firemen and caused about $25 million in property damage in Italy's highest criminal court has thrown out 13 life sentences for some of Calabria's top Mafia figures and ordered that they be tried again. The court ruled Thursday that the two judges in the first trial had not been formally approved.

TRAVEL UPDATE

The Italian airline Alitalia was granted a concession Friday to fly from Milan to Oslo, the Norwegian Ministry of Communications announced. The concession was for one year with an option for prolongation on an annual basis, the ministry said.

Rome is planning to allow cars to circulate only on alternate days depending on their license plates, Mayor Fietro Giubilo said Thursday. The plan, which still must be approved by a city council commission on traffic, would go into effect Dec. 1 through Dec. 23 as an experiment during the busy Christmas period.

WHALES: Helpless Giants Galvanize World Media

continue playing out the drama is mmense, despite concerns that the operation to forge a passage to open water for the animals may reach the limits of human and technological ability.

"It probably would be tremendonsly hard to stop now," said Army Master Sergeant Jim Bas-night, who is coordinating the Alaska national guard logistics.

Only part of the pressure is attributed to nightly television footage of the stranded whales. Other factors include thrice-daily phone inquiries from White House staff and an unprecedented alliance among oil companies. Alaska Army and Air National Guard, the North Slope Borough, federal agencies, Greenpeace and volun-

"This thing is just out of hand," said Craig George, a North Slope Borough biologist who has been involved in the rescue since a hunter found the whales two weeks ago. "It's taken on a life of its own,"

he said. "I guess at this point I'm interested in seeing if a rescue effort works. "There's a whale mania already in place," Mr. George added, walking away from reporters, "and you put a trapped whale in place, and you get international hysteria. This is frightening to me, this media As rescuers waited for a slow-moving icebreaking barge being towed by giant helicopters from Prudhoe Bay, some people were asking how much is too much. Oil companies estimate that hauling the barge 230 miles to Barrow could cost $500,000. The North Slope Borough is financing scores of helicopter trips to bring equipment, the journalists and rescuers to the site. The Alaska national guard is committed to providing whatever is needed, Sergeant Basnight said. "It'll be a while before anybody can put a price tag on it," he said. Whether the attempt is worthwhile depends on what is "reasonable effort," Arnold Brower Jr., a Barrow whaling captain, said.

"I think we'll have a technical and educational experiment for a lot of us, especially the state, the borough and the oil companies," he said. "When we have a humane concern, there are no obstacles." A man pointed out, however, that the publicity cannot hurt oil companies eager to demonstrate phone call from President Ronald

A Fairbanks physician, Dr. David Gramman, questioned the "col-lective caterwauling" by all concerned, calling the rescue attempt an example of misplaced priorities in a depressed Alaskan economy. "There is an almost overwhelming frustration in seeing enormous expenditures on behalf of these animals while impotently being forced to watch our patients and friends go without," Dr. Grauman said. Barrow residents are surprised at the attention being lavished on a natural event, distinguished only by the fact that these whales are trapped where they can be seen instead of at sea. Still, they generally support the effort. Then there is the apparent irony of saving three gray whales when whalers will attempt to harvest five bowhead whales as a food source when the ice clears. The Barrow community is allowed by the International Whaling Commission to harvest five bowhead whales for subsistence use.

If the gray whales should die or be destroyed as a humane measure, the Eskimos probably would not be cause of barnacles and bacteria, he East Europe

NBC Drops Steamy Series Ad With Quayle-Like Character

By Peter J. Boyer

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — NBC has stopped broadcasting a promotion for an upcoming sex-and-politics miniseries, "Favorite Son," after Republican officials complained that the ad seemed to be referring io Senator Dan Quayle.

It seemed "an unfortunate coincidence," Lee Atwater, campaign manager for Vice President George Bush, said of the NBC ad, which depicted a fictional young sena-tor who had been selected as a vice-presidential candidate "because he looks good on television."

The six-hour miniseries is to be shown at the end of this month. It features Harry

Hamlin as the charismatic senator, chosen for the No. 2 spot by a desperate president whose staff is convinced that he is about to lose the election.

The story, in which the senator's scandalous past comes back to haunt him, is based on a novel by Steve Sohmer, a former television and movie executive, that was published last year.

About a month ago NBC's promotional staff in Burbank, California, saw what one NBC executive termed "an ironic parallel" between the miniseries and media scrutiny of Mr. Quayle's background, including reports, denied by him, linking him romantically to a female lobbyist. The resulting promotional ad was deeq.

Smart Machines Need Smarter Operators

As automation spreads through U.S. factories, managers are finding that smarter workers are needed to handle the smarter machines, The New York Times reports. The result is called the "informated" plant.
Workers in such factories are given more authority to deal with problems instead of turning to their superiors. To do this, they need, and get, more production information than workers in an earlier era. "Automation doesn't work when the organizational structure doesn't accept it," said

Ramchandran Jaikumar, a professor at Harvard Business General Electric Co. says it School. intends to replicate, in its more than 300 factories worldwide, its plant in Salisbury, North Carolina, which The Times calls a showcase of worker-driven auto-

GE said the new system has been met with overwhelming, although not unanimous, worker approval. Opal Parnell, who runs a stamping machine, said, "You get more work out this way. The majority of people take it as a big opportunity. You're an adult, and you've got to do it."

Several workers left, saying they did not want the additional responsibility. But employee turnover has dropped from 15 percent a year to 6 percent.

Economists say the inevitable result will be more jobs for engineers, managers, scientists, com-puter experts and other technicians, and fewer for assemblers. laborers, movers and machine setters. Robert Kelly, a professor at Carnegie-Mellon University, calls these highly educated em-ployees "gold collar" workers.

Homosexual activists and several elected officials gathered Thursday at New York City Hall to protest NYNEX Corp.'s refusal to provide a "gay and lesbi-an organizations" listing in the Yellow Pages telephone book. They said the company's slogan. "If it's out there, it's in here," does not apply to them. To dramatize their point, Joan Byron, a martial arts enthusiast, chopped a directory in half with one kara-te chop. NYNEX had no immediate comment.

After a black fraternity at the University of Mississippi moved into its own house on fraternity row, the house was destroyed by arson Aug. 4. University officials and the student Interfraternity Council organized a drive to raise $20,000 for a new house. An anonymous alumnus offered to underwrite a $100,000 mortgage, and the school offered a $6,000 reward for the arrest and prosecution of the unknown arsonist. Members of white fraternities helped the blacks move into their new home. Stacey Woods, a white junior from Charleston, Mississippi, said, however, that all this was unlikely to lead to integration of the all-white or all-black fraternities and sororities themselves: Things are heading toward just greater acceptance of black orga-

An Olive Branch in Korea

rielded Tuesday when President Roh Tae Woo of South Korea took the podium at the United Nations. It marked the first time that the leader of South Korea, the only country the United Nations ever went to war to protect, has ever addressed that body. And Mr. Rob used the occasion to launch a courageous and creative diplomatic proposal to bring peace to his peninsula, an effort worthy of the strides he has made toward democracy at home.

North and South Korea, each without a UN seat and with armies among the world's largest, glare across the line that has divided them since after World War II. Nowhere except in Germany do East and West face each other so directly and dangerously. Mr. Roh now wants to talk peace with his neighbor and asks the help of the great powers. His strides toward democracy were anything but assured when he took office in February after his nation's first free elections in almost 20 years. A military man, he had been responsible for many of his party's reforms, but for many of its less savory aspects, too. How would be handle this economic giant that was still a political midget?

He answered by leading his country in successfully hosting the 1988 Olympic Games and by making clear progress toward democracy and human rights. Thus bolstered, Mr. Rob came to the United Nations to plead his case for a conference among the two Koreas and the powers that back them: the United States and Japan, the Soviet Union and China.

There have been almost as many false starts at resolving this issue as there have been bitter accusations, shootings and assassinations throughout the tenuous truce. North Korea's foreign minister, also speaking at the United Nations, gave a brittle if slightly conciliatory response to Mr. Roh. Still, there is movement. Moscow and Beijing have been pressing Pyongyang's fa-natic leadership toward reason. And Seoul, now a Western economic eminence, is reaching out to the Communist world. At home, Mr. Roh has held himself open to learning from those who pressed for political freedom, and Korea has benefited. Now he calls on friend and adversary alike to help in the search for peace. In both endeavors, he deserves full support. - THE NEW YORK TIMES

Monument to a Senator

At last, at long last, the United States has joined 97 other countries in a treaty outlawing genocide. Approval should have come long ago when, with the horror of the Holocaust fresh, Harry Truman first sent the treaty to the Senate. That approval now comes at all testifies to the tenacity of Senator William Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin, who retires this session,

The treaty is straightforward. It defines genocide (an attempt to destroy a national, ethnic, racial or religious group) and commits signatories to work to prevent it and to punish offenders. Yet a handful of conservatives persistently stalled it. Just as persistently. Mr. Proximire fought for it, in 3,000 speeches in the Senate. Now the senator ends a 30-year tenure, his battle finally won.

It has been a mayerick career from the day. Mr. Proxmire took the seat vacated by Jo-. seph McCarthy. If liberalism fires some senators and conservatism others, Mr. Proximire's cussed independence has been driven by frugality. In the brutal fight in 1970 over the SST, he opposed the Nixon administration. Boeing and two powerful senators from Washington state and defeated the costly supersonic transport. His penny-pinching has been the bane of defense contractors, social scientists - and fellow senators, whose raises, new gym and hefty campaign funds he has opposed.

"I think fully two-thirds of the senators could get re-elected without spending a he once said. Independently benny, wealthy, he financed his own campaigns.

The amount needed in 1982 was $145.10. Mr. Proxmire may be best known for his Golden Fleece award, presented monthly to agencies that exemplify wastefulness. The army won one for spending $6,000 to study the best way to buy Worcestershire sauce. The National Institute of Alcohol Abuse won for spending $102,000 to see if drunken fish are more aggressive than sober ones.

It has often been easier to see what Mr. Proximire was against than what he was for. But he has been unswervingly for the genocide treaty, opening every legislative day since 1967 with calls for its approval. Last week, the Senate took the final step at last. By so doing, it honored humanity, and Senator William Proxmire.

How to Police the Labs

Every so often a spectacular case of scientific fraud focuses the U.S. government's attention on how hard it is to keep track of the uses being made of its grant money. Scientific research is necessarily decentralized and independent; attempts to blow the whistle on individual wrongdoing often meet gative and adjudicative powers. institutional resistance or rebound on the informer. The 1981 case of John Darsee, a Some researchers say universities are already Harvard researcher found to have published 120 papers based on false research, led to a 1985 law requiring universities that applied for grants to show they had procedures to investigate scientific misconduct. But some recent cases, together with evidence that the 1985 law does not work well, have renewed efforts to regulate scientists. This time, both Congress and the National Institutes of Health are looking at proposals to go considerably farther — probably too far.

The NIH, the world's largest funding source for biomedical research ($4.4 billion in the 1987 fiscal year), recently solicited comments on some unusually broad questions about how that research should be policed. An inspector general's report had found that the current system suffers from decentralization and passivity; it can act only on complaints brought to it by universities, and has no power to enforce its own guidelines. Among the questions NIH ture of labs where senior scientists have no wants to consider in drafting new regulations are these: Is it an insuperable conflict of interest for universities to investigate their own research scientists, since a finding of misconduct could mean loss of grants by

Stiff penalties and the threat of a government audit could make the pressure worse. It is not clear that the laws and regulations being considered draw a sharp enough distinction between intentional falsification and mere error, which is intrinsic to research.

All this scrutiny may, however, have a Would-be regulators agree that it would be better for academic institutions to police themselves; the trouble has been their tendency to stonewall and drag their feet. Now there is movement by universities not only to expedite investigations but to address some general problems that foster error and misconduct: the pressures on young scientists to grind out research papers; the strucdirect responsibility for research that bears their names. By cleaning up their act, academic scientists may ward off government interference that could do them great harm. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

The Rabbi's Long Shadow

Rabbi Meir Kahane is candid: The American-born founder of the Jewish Defense League, a figure of increasing political importance in Israel, proclaims that democracy and Zionism are utterly incompatible. To preserve Zionism, Mr. Kahane says, democratic safeguards must be discarded and with them standards of decent political behavior. Specifically, he would create an Arab-free Greater Israel by expelling all the Palestinians living in the territories occupied by Israel since the 1967 war, and the 800,000 Arabs who are Israeli citizens.

There is no doubt that his message has found more receptive listeners as the Arab uprising that began last December has gone on. Israel's inability to stamp out the rebelbon has fueled frustration and boosted popular tolerance for repressive measures. The fact seems to be that no one in Israel has any practical ideas for bringing things back under control, other than an increasing use of force. And so the world watches as an advanced technological society that once commanded respect for its humane values resorts to the primitive brutalities of a Third World police state -- bone-breaking, collective punishments. It is against this background that Israelis are preparing to vote.

Mr. Kahane will not be on the ballot. But the chilling possibility occurs that the ideas he stands for may still be gaining support. — The Los Angeles Times.

An Investment in Yugoslavia

When Tito entrenched his reputation for independence by breaking with Stalin, the West applauded, not out of sympathy for Yugoslavs but out of Schadenfreude against the Russians. When Yugoslavia became the first Soviet-style Communist country to flirt with the free market, there were more cheers. Once fears that the Soviets might be drawn into the post-Tito power vacuum faded, the West has myopically ignored Yugoslavia's difficulties. If it all goes down the tubes, this outlook implies, it will simply be the most spectacular demonstration yet that the Soviet system doesn't work. But Yugoslavia's Western creditors should be looking harder to see whether they can discreetly help out, [if only out of] enlightened self-interest. - The Guardian (London).

In Finland, a Model of What Eastern Europe Could Be

 $H^{ ext{ELSINKI}}$  — With political trouble crupting from the Baltic to the Adriatic, there are signs that the hard-pressed Soviet leadership would like to recast its increasingly troublesome relationship with East-ern Europe. As some Soviet scholars have put it, the region is "pregnant with crisis." An answer to the Soviets' problems - and the West's - may lie in, of all places, Finland.

Downtown Helsinki presents a striking picture of what Eastern Europe might look like today but for the 1945 Soviet-imposed partition of Europe: a tasteful mixture of new and well-preserved old buildings; streets crowded with expensive cars; elegant, well-stocked boutiques; and optimistic-looking, fashionably dressed citizens. The contrast between Helsinki, a provincial city of czarist Russia, and the drab, impoverished Warsaw Pact capitals could not be greater.

By Dimitri Simes

prosperity has been controversial — Finlandization" has become a code word for political emasculation. Finland is overshadowed by its powerful neighbor and has been careful neither to offend Moscow nor to pose security concerns. Once it was feared that such a relationship with the Soviets might someday be the fate of Western Eu-rope: It, too, would be "Finlandized." In fact, Finlandization may not be such a bad idea — at least for the exhausted nations of Eastern Europe. For Finland provides a model of how Moscow's neighbors can grow and prosper economically without threatening the Soviet Union.

Is there a real possibility of applying the Finnish model to Eastern Europe? Not right away, and not easily. First, Finland is not as strategically impor-

The political context of Finland's tant to the Soviet Union as is Eastern Europe. And Finland has never been under Communist rule, making it easier for the Soviets to tolerate its democratic, capitalist system.

The Finns historically have had a much more accommodating attitude toward the Soviet empire than have most East Europeans, a telling point for the security-obsessed Russians. Finland emerged as an administra-tive entity under Russian control in the early 19th century and won au-tonomy in the 1860s. By contrast, most East Europeans feel deep hostil-ity to the Russian-Soviet superpower. Shifts in Kremfin policies introduced by Mikhail Gorbachev, however, are changing Soviet-East European dynamics. It would be optimistic, to put it mildly, to expect Mr. Gorbachev to Finlandize Poland. But, for the first time since World War II, there may be a real opportunity for the United States and the Soviets to have meaningful discussions on the region.

To begin with, Moscow's current arrangement with its Warsaw Pact clients is neither beneficial nor sustainable. According to Oleg Bogomolov, director of the Institute of Economics of World Socialist Systems in Moscow, the old Communist model of development no longer works in Eastem Europe. Writing in the newspaper Sovetskaya Kultura, Mr. Bogomolov argues that the old model results in "the aggravation of contradictions which can lead to open crises."

The Warsaw Pact allies are becoming liabilities for Moscow; its subsidies to them certainly amount to several billions of rubles. Mr. Gorbachev's attempts to promote an economic relationship more favorable to the Soviets are being stubbornly resisted by East European leaders, Nor are Warsaw Pact allies, fearful of destabilization, anxious to apply Gorbachev style reformist solutions to their own difficulties. Only Budapest seems genuinely pleased over the new winds from Moscow.

Soviet officials admit privately that if trends continue, Warsaw Pact gov. ernments will be challenged, perhaps violently, by their restive popula-tions. But if there is growing consen-ward the East European search for identity is clearly evolving toward greater tolerance. Mr. Gorbachev, who once vocally defended the Brezhnev Doctrine, in March signed a joint Soviet-Yugoslav declaration that considerance "the threat or the use of force than the interference in in any form and the interference in internal affairs of other countries

Some influential policy advisers have gone further. As Mr. Bogomolov observed, "Everyone has to follow very strictly the principles of sovereignty, noninterference and mutual respect. The Brezhnev Doctrine is completely unacceptable ... It's

The debate in Moscow over the East European morass may present an op-portunity for U.S. diplomacy. In the past, Moscow's deep suspicion of U.S. past, Moscow's deep suspicion of U.S. intentions made such negotiations impossible. But the Soviets are slowly learning to be more open-minder about dealing with the West. Mr. Gor-tbachev's top international affairs advisers publicly argue that exploring common interests with the West is crucial to perestroika's success. And Mr. Gorbachev's recent shake-up re-Mr. Gorbachev's recent shake-up reduced the influence of such conservatives as Yegor Ligachev, who viewed international developments through

The East European attitude favors talking to Moscow without delay. While most Warsaw Pact governments are uneasy about the superpowers discussing their fate, they increasingly want the United States to play a role in the region. Budapest, for instance, quietly appealed to Washington to exert pressure on Romania on behalf of its bused Hungarian minority.

to take a more positive attitude toward people there who challenge discredited practices of the past. With him in power, there is the unprecedented possibility that the East Europeans, once in control of their own destiny, may view the Soviets as the Finns have as a neighbor whose interests have to be borne in mind, rather than an occu-pier — and that they will not turn against the Soviet Union. But this chance may be short-lived.

The Finnish precedent should show Moscow that giving up control of Eastern Europe in favor of more liberal arrangements may serve the Soviets well. Jakko Iloniemi, a banker and former ambassador to Washington, noted that it is precisely because Fin-land is "a liberal, democratic, capitalist state that it can offer the Soviet Union a reliable good neighbor and a mutually profitable economic partnership." No relationship with a Communist satellite state is similarly

A historic compromise on Eastern Europe cannot be accomplished through a formal, bilateral U.S.-Soviet deal. It will have to be the outcome of many developments in many places: internal political leanings within Eastern Europe, multilateral arms reductions inside what Mr. Gorbachev likes to call "the common European home," and a climate of increasing East-West trust. But the spirit of Finlandization — and the economic and security arrangements that will accompany it — can emerge only from a U.S.-Soviet dialogue.

The Bear Still Moves Slowly — Especially on Israel

N EW YORK - In the morning, Soviet delegates talked at the United Nations with sion of the organization—stronger, more active in peace, better prepared to prevent war, a place where all problems from disarmament to the poisoning of the air could find decent solution.

And in the afternoon, the Soviet delegation once again cast its annual ballot to throw Israel out of the United Nations.

The world hardly noticed the ritual of hatred and hypocrisy on First Avenue. Everybody knew that the move to throw Israel out would fail. Why make a fuss about the yearly nastiness and the continuing Soviet addiction to it? There was some disappointment among the Israelis and a few of their friends that the Soviet Union still was not ready to act in the new spirit of international brotherhood for which it campaigns earnestly and eloquently at the United Nations, at least not when it comes to that annoying little country in the Middle East. Many countries, including some from Eastern Europe, have finally eased away from the oust-Israel campaign, possibly a little embarrassed at the stench of anti-Semitism that surrounds it. Presumably Israelis should be flowing with gratitude; perhaps one or two of them are. But the Arabs and other Moslem states could still count on Moscow and most of the Communist world, including staunch Cuba and loyal Nicaragua.

How can it be that on the same day the Soviet delegation can talk with new, fresh openness and working hard to retrieve and increase its influence in the Middle East. Like other powers, it is never reluctant to use those proven tools of diplomacy —double-dealing, hypocrisy and deception.

Moscow drops hints that it may, after 20 years, bestow upon Israel the gift of restoring diplomatic relations. That worries the Arabs and pleases the Israelis. But by voting to throw Israel out of the United Nations, the Kremlin makes sure that even if recognition does come, the Arabs understand whose side the Soviet Union really is on. Exactly how hints of recognition of Israel can be ethically or philosophically reconciled with throwing it out of the United Nations, Moscow leaves to the pure in heart to try to figure out.

The Soviet vote is also a sharp reminder to Israel that Moscow does not intend to abdicate influence in the Middle East. Moscow wants to take part in any international negotiations on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres also wants negotiations that include the Soviet Union, on the assumption that the Russians will just show up, bless the gathering and not cause any trouble pressuring Israel in favor of the Arabs.

Mr. Peres is very intelligent, and maybe he is right. But the Russian vote will not help him in the Israeli elections on Nov. 1. Israelis, in their arrogant way, may find it difficult to invite the

At the United Nations, the Soviets privately told the Israelis to be patient, that the "bear takes small steps." That may not convince anybody who has seen a bear cover ground. But it is better than the "good guy-bad guy" theory — constant struggle among Soviet foreign policy makers, with Mikhail Gorbachev and his supporters always fighting their enemies.

The reality is that Mr. Gorbachev has reached the conclusion that it is in Soviet interests to build diplomatic and economic bridges with the West. As long as he remains convinced, or until he is overruled, that will be the broad Soviet policy. That still gives Moscow lots of room to work for specific Soviet goals and interests. Mr. Gorbachev has decided that it is not now in Soviet interests to persuade Arabs to take the first and essential step toward peace in the Middle East: total acceptance of Israel, legally, politically, emotionally.

Instead he sees it in Soviet interests to stir the hatred pot by voting to make Israel the outcast of the world even though that prevents a Middle East peace — or perhaps because it does.

That does not mean Moscow's UN proposals are frauds. It does mean that Soviet foreign policy is still taking shape and is based on many interests. If we move toward it we should walk as slowly as any bear ever seen on First Avenue.

Peace and prosperity made it hard for any challenger to run this year. What made it impossible for Mr. Dukakis was his ideology. Which is why he started the campaign by declaring that it was not about ideology at all, just competence. His strategy was to run against the Bush persona. Hence the Democratic convention's orchestrated abuse of the vice president as a servile, squash-playing, upper-class wimp. Hence also, the convention's rather open decision to conceal its liberal impulses in order finally to win one. Three months later, the concealment having proved inadequate, Mr. Dukakis is running away. In his final debate that resonate among white voters.

The clearest signal has been his attack on Governor Dukakis over the case of Willie Horton, a convicted murderer who was let out of a Massachusetts prison on a weekend furlough, fled and raped a woman in Maryland. Mr. Dukakis had nothing to do personally with the Horton case, and the furlough program was set up by his Republican predecessor.

But the Bush campaign's deceptive attack on him was highly effective.

Medicare, deposit insurance, fair labor relations, the Atlantic alliance — all the structures of the safe, prosperous world we now inhabit - to liberalism. Want to make something of it?" Why does Mr. Dukakis not do this? Not because he lacks the courage of his convictions, but because he calculates that an open admission and defense of liberalism, which since 1968 has presented the country broader political factor, underlying the so-called social issues. "Crime, gun control, law and order: the whole agenda originated in the racial polarization of the late 1960s — black power, violence, the primaries and showing the politics of racial resentment in the North. After 1964 the Democrats carried the South only in 1976, with a Southerner, Car-ter, as the candidate; and even then perceived failure of the Great Society. And Bush uses the social issues to define Dukakis as a 1960s liberal. "The two groups where the Demo-crats have lost the most votes since "The fear of crime originated in racial fear. In some places - Chica-

Another point is that blacks are more dependent than any other group on federal help, and whites tend to resent that. The Reagan cuts in domestic spending fit those feelings. Now, Mr. Schneider says, "the perception is that Bush is for the Reagan agenda, so he's not for blacks."

To say those things —and a column can only touch this deeply serious subject - is to know that much more is involved than campaign politics.

A report just issued by the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities in Washington spells out what we all know: The economic gap between black and white American families is widening. The movement is toward two nations, separate and unequal.

preferences, countercultural tolerance and retreat abroad, will not sell. Liberalism, as redefined in the post-Vietnam era, is finished as a winning national ideology. Which makes blaming the Dukakis campaign for the Democrats' current fate a simple case of scapegoating.

The turning point of this campaign was not, as some suggest, when Mr. Dukakis produced a stunningly mechanical response to a shock question about the hypothetical rape and mur-der of his wife. (A piece of Geraldo Rivera journalism, by the way. Would simple murder not have sufficed to elicit a husband's rage?) Nor was the turning point Mr. Dukakis's refusal to answer Mr. Bush's demagoguery in kind. He did not, in fact, refuse. He just tried and failed with some creative demagoguery of his own, right down to the racial tinging. (When Democrats rail against ferners buying up Los Ange-les, they are not talking about Brits.) No, the turning point of this campaign came a lot earlier: In July, when the Democratic Party nominated a liberal and tried to cam-paign on the premise that it had not; and last year, when Senators Sam Nunn and Bill Bradley and former Governor Charles Robb realized that the Democratic Party was not ready for a moderate nominee and declined to run; and 1972, when the countercultural and isolationist tendencies spawned by Vietnam and the '60s first made their home in the Democratic Party. The rest is detail. Washington Post Writers Group.

the prism of East-West confrontation.

Obviously, the West must be reasonable in its expectations of what is possible in Eastern Europe. But the United States has little to lose and much to gain from exploring the outer limits of the new Soviet flexibility. It would not be unduly provocative to tell Moscow that the Cold War can be truly buried only where it was born - in Eastern Europe. The Gorbachev team understands that no stable East-West rapprochement can be reached as long as East European turmoil remains a daily possibility.

Italy Bars Widow Of War Criminal

Italy has harred Anneliese Kappler, 63, the widow of a Nazi war criminal, from entering the country. Interior Minister Antonio Gava labeled Mrs. Kappler "undesirable" Wednesday after it became known that she planned to come to Rome this week to promore her book describing how she helped Herbert Kappler. a former colonel in Hitler's elite SS troops, escape from a Rome military hospital in 1977.

The announcement of the trip caused an outery among members of Italy's Jewish com-munity, who this week were commemorating the 50th anniversary of the anti-Semitic laws enacted by Mussolini's fascist regime. Several politicians, in-cluding Justice Minister Giuliano Vassalli and Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti, also strongly opposed the visit. The Rome daily La Repubblica said that in her book, "I'll Take You Home," Mrs. Kappler attempt ed to whitewash her husband's reputation by claiming that he was "a friend of the Jews."

Kappler, who had been the Nazi police chief in Rome, was condemned to life imprisonment in 1948 for the 1944 mas-sacre of 335 Italian civilians in reprisal for the killing of 32 German soldiers by Italian parusans. Mrs. Kappler smuggled him out of the military hospital in 1977 and spirited him to Soltau. West Germany. He died of intestinal cancer the following

The export of horses has been banned. The disease had been eradicated in Europe until an outbreak killed over 300 horses in central Spain last fall. Two out of three persons could not spell "embarrass" correctly. The survey was based on interviews with 944 people aged 15 and over at locations throughout Britain. People aged between 15 and 24 did worse than all other age groups, the survey showed. Angela Rumbold, Britain's education minister, called the results "most depressing."

The Twisting Road To the Sculptures Of Henry Moore

manages to do what is most difficult in any kind of exhibition - it is a summing up of a complex man's ocuvre, but it also tells a story. Thanks to Ivor Heal, the exhibition designer who was a sculptor, it does so with a sense of visual rhythm that leaves the visitor breathless.

At one point you walk from a room filled with monumental for that of a draftsman working 50 sculpture into another devoted to bronzes and from there into the room devoted to a group of draw-ings with a single huge plaster ma-quette in the center. Next you find yourself among the tall totem-like bronzes with a threatening appearance that lead into a large room, the most accomplished, with big abstract bronzes, widely spaced, leading up to the largest of all. It is majestic. Here at last seems to be the serenity which Moore strove to achieve. Many, even among art lovers, will jump in surprise as they discover some of the lanes through which Moore went before attaining the skill is remarkable. Indeed, one of the revelations of the exhibition is the extent to which Moore was steeped in quasi-academic figuration in his early phase. At school, in 1921, he sketched the head of an "old man" whose hairdo is modern but whose searching expression could otherwise be that of a crayon portrait by a Louis XVI period artist. This manner appears to have been close to the artist's heart. When portraying his mother in 1927, he did a sketch in pencil, pen and ink of her that is forceful, even if it could easily be mistaken

After seeing this exhibition, you are not surprised to learn that in his first exhibitions — in 1928 and 1931 — the man now seen as the giant of 20th century sculpture showed and sold more drawings than three-dimensional art. Some might even argue that Moore was greatest when drawing. The series of sketches he did in the London Underground in 1940 and 1941 during the London Blitz is one of the most astonishing - and admirable - episodes in 20th century art. As if shaken to his depth by the ordeal, the sculptor devised a totally new style that relates to little else in his own oeuvre. From the ghostly silhouettes on a platform in "Grey Tube Shelter" to the chalky drapes of "Shelter Scene: one, done at his professor's request. Two Swathed Figures" done a year

But by the late 1950s, Moore had devised a unique style in which volumes, reminiscent of rocks and wooden stumps, somehow suggest pure abstraction of "Knife Edge Two-Piece" - huge, sinuous, irregular slabs cast in bronze that reminded me most of some of the weird shapes carved in sandstone by wind and rain in the Fontaine-

Now fully penetrated by his own perception of the world, Moore managed to carry over this prime-val-world-in-the-making feel into abstraction and figuration alike. His "Mountains and Sky," a watercolor done in 1982 in the Turnerian tradition, somehow ties in with "Knile Edge Two-Piece," the monumental bronze done 20 years earlier. His ability to compress different ages of art and to store up countless visual impressions in order to merge it all is perhaps what led him to be seen as the archetypal artist of our time. It is no coincidence that the architects who designed the Paris headquarters of UNESCO turned to Moore for the monumental 38-ton sculpture of travertine marble that stands, or rather hovers

Carrying 'Gaîté' to Paris

By David Stevens International Herald Tribune

D ARIS - Once in a while in the theater the stumes seem to be the star of the show — Picasso's Cubist fantasies for "Parade," Saint Laurent's for Barrault's staging of Beanmarchais's
"Marriage of Figaro" come to mind. Christian Lacroix joined the short list earlier this year with his deliciously theatrical creations for American Ballet Theatre's revival of "Gaîté Parisienne," now the centerpiece of the Paris Dance Festival.

It is hardly news that Lacroix is a couture star with a theatrical flair, and his parade of designs — a candy and ice cream riot of colors, stripes and dots — was fun in itself. But this is ballet, and the best thing about these costumes is the specific and pertinent role they play in this exuberant revival of one of the great cream-puff hits of the century. "Gaite Parisienne" was created 50 years ago by

Léonide Massine for the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, which carried the work in its baggage when the company moved to the United States soon after. "Gaite" long remained a popular hit, al-though it and the ballets of Massine in general. with their focus on character dancing, in time melted away in the pure heat of Balanchine's sun. But when Lacroix can dress women so theatrically in "real" life, can a revival of "Gaîté Parisienne" be far behind? His costumes and Zack Brown's complementary curtain and set — a night-club with the Eiffel Tower sparkling in the distance — shift the period from Second Empire to Belle Epoque, equally suitable for this stylized evocation of late-19th-century Paris's deminonde nightlife.

Massine's choreography, building to an apotheosis of the cancan, has been vividly reconstructed by his son, Lorca Massine, and Manuel Rosenthat's adaptation and orchestration of Offenbach's operatta hits remains fresh, and got a lively ride from Jack Everly and the Lamoureux Orchestra. (Rosenthal, at 84 still an active conductor, took a bow from the audience on Wednesday).

At the festival gala Tuesday Susan Jaffe was the beguiling Glove Seller and Ricardo Bustamente the elegant Baron who wins her. Amy Rose was the leggy Flower Girl, and Johan Renvall the frenetic Peruvian whose demented hunt for a little innocent sin is the thin thread that holds it all together.

But what do you do with the menu when the main course is a dessert? For the gala Mikhail Baryshnikov — here as ABT's nondancing artistic director — served up three piquant appetizers. They were Antony Tudor's "Fandango," a slender exercise in Spanish style for five ballerinas to harpsichord music of Antonio Soler: "Le Jardin de Villandry," a complex and subtly droll pas de trois to a Schubert trio movement, originally done by the Crowsnest Trio, and Mark Morris's "One Charming Night." a pas de deux set to Purcell songs, alternately tender, violent and comical aspects of sexual attraction, danced lyrically by Teri Weksler and with manic energy by Morris himself. For the festival proper, the company brought works that represent different aspects of a wide-ranging repertory. ABT is a principal repository of Tudor's works, and while the repressive social atmosphere of "Pillar of Fire" may be somewhat dated, the anstere and nuanced beauty of the choreography remains. Leslie Browne gave an intense performance in the central role of Hagar, strongly supported by Cynthia Anderson, Alessan-dra Ferri, Michael Owen and Ricardo Bustamente.

Amy Rose as the Flower Seller in "Gaîté."

"Bruch Violin Concerto No. I" is a recent ballet by Clark Tippet, long an ABT dancer. A plotless work for 24 dancers, including eight soloists, it serves the troupe well as a showpiece in the classical idiom, even if — like the syrupy Bruch concerto — it somewhat overstays its welcome.

The company, on its first visit to Paris since 1977, seems to be one looking to the future. If it lacks some of the stars of the recent past, it has depth and is particularly strong in women soloists. And if the festival repertory omits the Romantic classics or other meaty large-scale works, it honors the company's past with Massine and Tudor and looks ahead with Tippet and Morris (whose "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes" is also on the weekend bill of fare).

Earlier, Roland Petit's Ballet National de Marseille opened the festival with his "Ma Pavlova," not so much an evocation of the great dancer than a sentimental mixed bag of balletic vignettes evoking the vaudevillian atmosphere of Pavlova's baru-storming tours. Typical of the dislocations was Eric Vu An's virtuoso solo to Tchaikovsky's Black Swan music, Dominique Khalfouni, Luigi Bonino, Denys Ganio and Jean-Pierre Aviotte were among some of the strong dancers more or less lost in the

Hard Lines Melt Away as Paris Mood Shifts

By Suzy Menkes

ARIS — Christian Lacroix's collection was a mess — but a glorious mess, bubbling like a bouillabatise with imagination and ideas, stuffed with fresh ingredients, rich in its different flavors and sprinkled with spicy colors. It was indigestible, swallowed in a gulp at the end of a long day.

The parts to savor were, surprisingly from a master of color, in quiet shades of pale: the opening outfits when wide-legged jump suits in beige crepe flowed clear and clean under short jackets that were cut on the curve, often with low decolletes and breaking into a burst of color. Curvy cream sweaters, crunchy with crochet flowers worn over flower-embroidered talle skirts and pants, were delicious.

"Those knits!" said Saks' Ellin Saltzman, rolling her eyes heavenward.

"Interesting new directions," was her overall comment on the show.

There were too many directions, but the general move was downward, with longer skirts and wide pants—which Lacroix first spawned two years and everyone has comed. There was also a drift away from the body.

It looked ravishing in a wild toreador silk print in corrida colors, as a soft trapeze coat with a panel of smocking at the back, and ethnic style as a boney-colored linen smock with open-work embroidery around the hem. The floor eleits all fluttered out into an A-line shape. short skirts all fluttered out into an A-line shape.

As Lacroix's talent matures, it is clear that his importance is not in the line, which seems to have moved so drastically from piqué and pouffes to chilfon and drapes. It is about an attitude of mind, which gives back to women a charm and reticence in dress. Much of that inspiration comes from the past, and there was a quaint, and sometimes fusty, period flavor to dresses with skirts fluting out to a midcalf hem.

The swimwear was inspired by Deauville days, but it looked new in its innocence. Stretchy cotton and lycra in spice-rack colors was draped on the bodice, while the long legs tweaked into a ripple of fabric at the thigh.

A second wave of swimsuits followed — an example of the show's muddled staging. They were channing polka-dot playstits with skating skirts, drapes and flares. That scene flowed into loose jump-suit shorts.

ACROIX'S collections are also about decoration — something that has been out of fashion for so long that it holds an element of surprise. Graceful sundresses with bustier tops had long skirts sprouting heart-shaped ruffled pockets. Layers of ruffles foamed down sleeves of creamy chiffon or made a dickie front to a chiffon dress.

The evening embroideries, rich and rare for a ready-to-wear collection, were drawn from the East, effective as the edging of the trapeze-line tunic with pants or fringing the hems of orange pants under a salmon pink redingote jacket. That was a withy twist to the hippic look that Lacroix showed in his last ready-to-wear collection, once again launching a trend. Lacroix also returned to his own favorite themes, especially for the accessories, which he launches this week as seven separate lines. Those on accessories, which he faunches this week as seven separate lines. Those on the runway included ethnic sandals, African-inspired jewelry and deep crowned hats. Thonged sandals in a provençale print were delightful. He also came up with the most stunning knits, by patching prim provençale prints, in sharp colorings, with wild abstract patterns inspired by Picasso and Miró. It was audacious, opulent and totally successful—one of the moments when the show took fire.

By contrast, Lacroix closed the show with black and midnight blue draved dresses: a transper of opening unfiles or bigs. on the chiffen draped dresses: a trapeze of organza ruffles or bias-cut sheer chiffon, wrapping the hips and flowing into a longer black satin skirt. It was interesting as an intellectual exercise to show what he could do with the little black dress. It did not look as though it came from the heart.

LACROIX:

This was a sophisticated show that was especially good at light, but also soft and well-proportioned in the day clothes. The first message was the very long skirt. Although wide pants flared out under long fitted jackets, it was the hemlines scraping the ankle that made the statement. These skirts came in light fabrics that moved well, although some were long and Shoes were flat. Short skirts still followed the flaring line, for they went under A-line tunics that were almost cut with a long body shape below a pretty neckline.

The silhouette was therefore new — narrow at the shoulder and out in the lower half of the body. But this was gracefully done with Impressionist flower-print skirts floating under belt-ed jackets, or with tea dresses shaped like a redingote. One of these in rose print cotton cloque had "a rose is a rose" scribbled on — a familiar witty Lagerfeld touch in an otherwise restrained

The long A-line, flowing from narrow to wide, will not frighten off women who are accustomed to a wide shoulder line over skinny skirt.

A ladylike feeling ran throughout, emphasized by the models' long, loose hair and by the accessories, which included straw hats and elbow-length gloves - so there was very little flesh on AGERFELD gave volume to his skirts in different ways and brought in an evening dress that was bulbous to the knees and narrow at the hem, which looked awkward. His attenuated lines worked well with pleats. Navy chilfon pants, caught in tiers of vertical pleats and worn with a creamy crepe blouse, was a perfectly balanced outfit. So were the fine and silky knits in buttermilk shades that played with proportions of short over long.

The evening clothes stood out for their luxury, sophistication and light-as-a-souffle handling, although black jersey dresses draped into a bustle at the back looked a little heavy for the season. Color was added to the black with vibrant satin shortsleeved jackets that molded the upper half of the body above the

this season and looked pretty and fluid. Evening ideas — and there were a lot of good ones — included pique bodices with low décolletés in an odd marriage with shimmering lamé skirts, chiffon draped into a toga dress and a very long trapeze-line dress, falling from a narrow shoulder to a wide hemline, in a mix of checkerboard and mosaic prints. That was on the wild side.

Trans-Atlantic Love Blossoms Again

By Nina Hyde

ARIS - It is like a love affair that has been put on hold. The American devotion to European designer clothes, which has carried on for more than 20 years, has been curbed in recent seasons. While Americans have remained faithful to some of the old-timers like Chanel, Emanuel Ungaro and Giorgio Armani - fashion houses which never depart wildly from their signature style - other houses have felt the snub where it hurts the most in the pocketbook.

As a result, many designers are courting American business in their new collections with more reasonable styling and closer attention to inherent value.

Even Yves Saint Laurent, who has had the most long-lasting and devoted fans but for a period had a falling out with them while he strayed from the familiar spirit of Saint Laurent designs, is back to wooing his American

"Now with the competition from American designers and the stores' private label clothes, European products have to be very good, very well made and competitively priced," said YSL's Joy Hendricks. "If the product is good it seils," she added. Apparently their new approach is working. In the recent season and the one before, Saint Laurent's ready-to-wear business is ahead by an impressive 10 percent. Even their couture business is ahead. When the couture collection was shown in New York this summer - and whoppingly applanded -- along with the usual followers were five Americans unknown to the house who spent sizable sums of money.

With prices escalating because of the weakened dollar and the increased cost in European fabric, some women are deciding "that it is almost anti-chic to spend so much money on clothes," said Bernie Ozer of the Associated Merchandising Corp., which advises more stores than any other organization.

He finds that, as stores have become more cantious about their purchases, they are also more demanding of on-time deliveries. "No more laissez-faire," he said.

Many designers have increased their volume of business by opening their own stores in the United States. For some, like Rodier and Celine, according to Ozer, it has helped their business by simply responding to a demand for a more youthful look in their styling.

But for others, like Chanel and Ungaro, it has enhanced their business without hurting the stores that carry their lines. "We overlap on styles," said Ellin Saltzman of Saks Fifth Avenue, "but we offer the customer head-to-toe shopping, which makes a major difference." Kitty d'Alessio of Chanel added that it is also a boon to the designers. "I think it also prompts stores that carry Chanel to see a vast variety of styles they they never considered buying from Chanel, what will sell is these clothes that are carried in depth." she said. Saks, like other stores, is seeing a major boost from the lower-priced lines of the top designers. Armani only offers the burgeoning Emporio Armani business at their own boutique in the United States, but the lower-priced Mani line is enhancing the already strong Armani sales across the country. Sola Donna is a spinoff from Ungaro, Ferré 001 a highly successful new lower-priced line from Gianfranco Ferre, Miss V from Valentino, Jean Muir has a lower-priced line, and Genny is a more commercial version of the Gianni Versace collection. All contribute in a major way to bigger sales of the designers at the top of the hear.

Kalman Ruttenstein, vice president and fashion director of Bloomingdale's, notes that Ungaro and Armani are getting stronger, but other lines are falling off. Ruttenstein puts part of the blame on an overall flatness in business, as well as increased prices. "For the moment we don't have the discretionary dollars with which to experiment and bring in new lines and new designers, as we have in seasons past," he said. "It's unfortunate, but it is the wav it is." In fact, said Ruttenstein, "People who buy these outrageously priced imports don't want to experiment with new names. They want the safety of being familiar with the labels."

There are many American customers, both retail and individual; who are buying American clothes out of pride, supporting the Seventh Avenue designers who are working hard to keep styles interesting and prices down. Ivana Trump, once an important customer of Christian Lacroix, for example, has said she

Who will buy the nouveau hippie look? For the young it is fresh and funky — but expensive at designer level. ## Trousers — High and Wide — Stage a Comeback

ARIS — Trousers have marched back into the spotlight for autumn and winter in Paris shops after being upstaged briefly by the ruffled mini craze. And this season's dominant styles in les nouveaux pantalons are but distant cousins to the masculine classics

Besides the usual classic tailored trousers, skintight jersey and shorter toreador pants, some new varieties show up this season.

New Woman Begins Reign Of Curves

By Suzy Menkes

ARIS - The French have a word ARIS — The French have a word for the changing style of models we are seeing on the runways. They are called les pulpeuses — a word that defles translation into English. It means literally "pulpy" or "fruity." Pulpeuses are women with curves in all the right places, gently rounded, but never fat. They have luscious skins and radiate a natural healthiness. They are also pretty easy.

The expression is used and understood by all nations who talk with their hands. Describing a pulpeuse requires much cupping of the fingers and shaping an hourglass in the air. Yet the figures drawn are tender and womanly, not sexist vamps. "It means a ripe fruit," says Karl Lagerfeld, when I asked for his English version, with skin soft as a peach and just ready to eat,"

"Rounded," said Christian Lacroix.

 $B^{\,\text{UT}}$  NONE of these words quite expresses in English the new deal on the runways, as girls are suddenly swelling into women and marking the end of the 20-ear reign of pin-thin, boyish mannequins.

Fashions in women change over the de-cades as dramatically as their clothes. It is hard to decide which came first — the bustle or the sway-back derrière; Twiggy or the skinny-rib '60s sweater. Bosoms were "in" (which meant out) in the Edwardian era, and "out" (or shall we say in) for the flat-chested '20s. The bust was last uplifted by the 1950s sweater girls. It shrank along with the miniskirt and was straightened out in the androgynous '80s. Hips are never quite in fashion. Yet the beanpole models look less and less well beside the new stars: the shapely, dusky Naomi, first promoted, like the pulpeuse Kadhija, by Yves Saint Laurent.

spending their cash on "breast enhance-ment." The results of that cosmetic operation are already displayed by the gazelle-like Ethiopian model Iman.

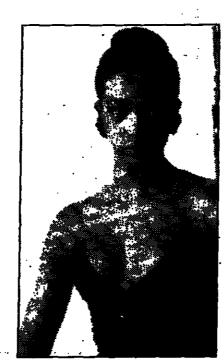

The point of this new look is not that it is sexy or seductive. Models have been gyrating down the runways or prowling across the stage since the big top presentations first began.

Les pulpeuses have bosoms; they have waists and hips and thighs. But they also have a sweet freshness and femininity that reaches back to an innocent era when girls were 18th-century maidens and the French word was first coined.

THE CHANGING style in girls also presages a change in fashion. The silken skins and rounded limbs of the models seem to be dictating to designers the soft drapes and filmy fabrics we are seeing in the opening Paris shows. It all suggests a New Woman for the

A brave man might dare to suggest that the latest models are shaped as nature had always intended for woman. And that a pulpeuse by any other name, would seem as sweet.

No one understands the impor-tance of accessories better than Christian Lacroix, who, like some others, has never shown a collec-tion that has not been fully accessorized with his uniquely shaped and colored handbags, his amusing hats, his decorated shoes, and his special breed of jewelry and glasses. So now, this season, he is lannching seven lines of accessories to be sold alongside his While stores consider Lacroix ready-to-wear a "developing" business, Lacroix is not disappointed with his slow start in this area. In fact, he says, it was calculated to go this way. "We only wanted to sell 20,000 pieces of the first collection and we sold 22,000. Now we want to sell more, but we didn't want to start off too fast," said Laure du Pavillon, spokesperson for the His next Luxe collection will be made by Genny in Italy, which makes his ready-to-wear line, as a way of curbing costs by about a third, said du Pavillon.

third, said du Pavillon.

It is not just French or Italian or English designer clothes that American customers seek out.
There is a big customer base for the Escada clothes from West Germany, said Saltzman of Saks Fifth Avenue. "It is beautiful quality

German-made Louis Feraud designs "because they are in the same mood as the top designers but, while quality made, at a competitive price," said Ernest Marx, president of Saks-Jandel, import central in Washington.

While some customers have shied away from these imports, there are still plenty who want European designer clothes at almost any price.

"European designers offer a different look than American designers who tend to show clothes that are more clean, modern and less fussy," said Sarah Davies, fashion director for the much-admired. Seattle-based Nordstrom chain. "European styling is often quite dramatic and balances the wardrobe with something unique and

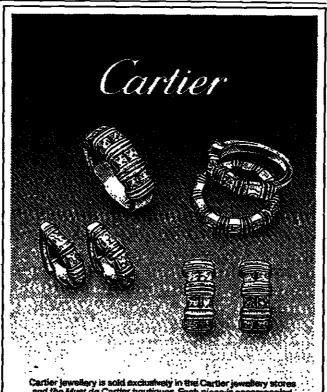

At Saks-Jandel in Washington, the import business is better than ever. "Our customers see that not only have American clothes caught up in price with our European clothes because they all use European fabrics, but with European clothes they can have some exclusivity. They are much less likely to see someone showing up in the same dress," said Marx. Some love affairs never end.

Other stores like Saks-Jandel in Washington have success with the The Washington Post.

NYSE Gains in Active Trading

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange closed slightly higher Friday in active trading after a last-minute spurt of buying pushed the Dow to its highest post-collapse level for the third time in a week.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which had jumped 43.92 Thursday, rose 2.31 to close at 2,183.50. For the week, the 30-stock index rose 50.32 points.

Advances led declines by a 9-8 ratio. Volume was 195.41 million shares, up from 189.58 million traded Thursday.

Broader market indexes also advanced. The NYSE composite index rose 0.41 to close at 159.42. Standard & Poor's 500-stock index rose 0.78 to 283.66. The price of an average share gained 8 cents.

"After Thursday's run, most of this session was spent defending the gains," said Sid Dorr, vice president of block trading at Robinson-Humphrey Co. in Atlanta. "I think the market did a credible job. For the week, Mr. Dorr said the market

"behaved a lot better than I expected. There was some nervousness about the anniversary," a reference to Wednesday's first anniversary of the 1987 market collapse. Before the market opened, the government said the U.S. Consumer Price Index for September rose 0.3 percent, compared with 0.4 percent increases in both July and August. The report was in line with market expectations. The Dow fell about 15 points in early trading on the American Stock Exchange.

She said a large part of the previous session's 44-point surge was related to Friday's expiration of October stock-index futures. Some traders are beginning to nail some profits, but there is no urgency here," Ms. Latimer said. "Traders are doing their own thing. They have time to make sound judg-

In light of the market's recovery high set Thursday, she said, "A modest correction is not that far away."

"One positive development is that in previous markets an earnings report on one stock would impact on similar issues," Ms. Latimer said.

But now earnings news is isolated to that one COMPANY RJR Nabisco was the most active issue, off % Kraft followed, up 1% to 92. AT&T was third, up 1/2 to 27%.

Attorng other blue chips, American Express was off % to 29%, Eastman Kodak was off % to 49 and General Electric was off 1/2 to 44%. In the technology sector, Digital Equipment was off 41/6 to 87 on disappointing third-quarter earnings released late Thursday. Cray Research was off % to 71%.

Advice for Next President: Listen to the U.S. People

By LEONARD SILK

New York Times Service

EW YORK - How much does the outlook for the American economy depend on whether George Bush or Michael S. Dukakis is the next president? The Economist, the irreverent British weekly, keeps calling the man who will lead the United States during the next four years "President Bushakis." This implies that, despite apparent differences between the candidates in personality, ideology and Flyle and on taxes, trade, foreign investment, military spending, or whatever, the first post-Reagan administration will be essentially the same, whoever sits in the White House.

Either man will be bound by the same budgetary constraints. Both candidates have been promising initiatives to deal with

AME & Stock Inde.

In the military area, cuts of at least $150 billion will be needed to hold real outlays constant -- that is, growing by no more than the rate of inflation, a goal favored by both Mr. Bush and Mr. Dukakis. There are other major constraints facing the next president, especially the persistent deficit in the nation's external payments as the cost of servicing foreign debt rises; the growing depen-dence on foreign capital; the weak dollar, the power of others to retaliate if the United States were so foolish and reckless as to pursue a protectionist course, and the demands of the American people that the next administration strengthen the country's competitiveness against Japan and other countries. How can the next president deal with these pressures? In a challenging new book, "Starting with the People," Daniel Yankelovich, the public opinion analyst, and Sidney Harman, an industrialist and former undersecretary of commerce, contend that the usual American way of top-down policy-making, with experts prescribing and the public being led to accept their prescriptions, is failing. They call upon the next president to listen to the people and ground his policies on the people's own

N THE economic area, they find that the public favors both market and communal values, not one or the other, and the government's job is to avoid a collision between them. This does not imply "equal treatment" for the two values. Most Americans, the authors find, are "pragmatic and realistic" and know that competing with Japan and other countries is rough and will require sacrifices.

"They are willing to tip the balance in favor of market values," the book says. "But they insist that the rules be fair and that the victims be helped."

Compensiveness will require greater support for education and research and development. But solutions need to be found not just in government but also in the workplace: Employers need to recognize the importance of the individual in the new global compension; the authors stress how decisive individual performances and individual rewards are. They urge unions "to gain greater knowledge of the management side of the picture and to assume more responsibility for the fate of the business." They contend that the time is right for a fresh start in the trade union

As the next American president faces severe constraints, so does he enjoy some great opportunities. A principal one is recognition by the Soviet Union that it needs peace and openness for the sake of its economic development, and the American public's willingness to proceed on arms control and arms reducjeopardizing national security.

Bond Has Big Stake In Lonrho

Australian Raises Holding to 14%

By Warren Getler

International Heroid Tribune
LONDON — Lonnho PLC, the British trading conglomerate, said
Friday that companies headed by the Australian businessman Alan Bond had acquired a 14.8 percent stake in Lonrho.

Analysis were divided on whether Mr. Bond's stake, which includes 66.75 million shares acquired in recent weeks, was meant to be friend ly or hostile. Some speculated that it could be the prelude to a full-scale hid for Loarno by Bond Corp. Holdings, the brewing and finan-cial concern based in Perth, Australia, that forms the core of Mr.

The friendship between Mr. Bond and R. W. Rowland, the 71year-old chief executive of Lourho, raised additional questions about the dealings. Analysts said the men, both colorful characters who run their businesses with strong hands, had discussed joint ventures recently.

"On the face of it, it looks hostile," Paul Beaufrere, an analyst with James Capel & Co. in London, said of the Bond stake in Lonrho. "Mr. Bond may be more than just vaguely attracted to some of Lonrho's assets and may want to extract some of those in any end game he might be planning.

The analyst noted that "Lonrho has hotels, drinks, vineyards, mines and oil, which would be consistent with Bond's trading philosophy." Earlier this month, Bond Corp. said it had acquired an 11 percent interest in Allied-Lyons PLC, a British beverages concern.

But Richard Howell, who tracks Lonrho for Sheppards Research, a London brokerage, said he thought the Bond stake in Lonnho was friendly and Lourho's share price was likely to fall further, since an amicable arrangement between Mr. Rowland and Mr. Bond would lock up about 32 percent of Lourho's shares, making it essentially imnune to hostile takeovers. Mr. Howell asserted, "Tiny

A Hint of Compromise at OPEC

MADRID - Iraq said Friday that it was trying to narrow differences with Iran over oil output, the first sign in two days of OPEC talks that the two Gulf War foes might be ready to compromise to help prop up world prices.

Iraq's oil minister, Isam Abd al-Rahim ash-

Shalabi, asked whether Baghdad and Tehran were narrowing their differences, said, "Well, we're try-dispute that has kept Iraq out of the production programming agreement operated by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. Iraq has refused to accept an output quota unless awarded one as big as that of Iran, historically a bigger exporter. Iran has resisted that idea. Now, other cartel members insist that Iraq should accept curbs on its production. Resolving the Iran-Iraq dispute is seen by oil analysts as a key first step to restoring OPEC discipline and curbing the excess output that has recently depressed world petroleum prices. Oil ministers of Algeria, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Nigeria, Sandi Arabia and Venezuela are meeting to discuss a possible higher OPEC ceiling.

Oil prices fell sharply Friday. West Texas Inter-mediate, the benchmark U.S. crude, for immediate delivery, slipped 9 cents to $14.37 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

BA Orders Jets From Boeing For £1 Billion

LONDON - British Airways ordered 31 Boeing airliners on Friday, ending an intense battle be-tween the U.S. aerospace giant and Airbus Industrie, the European consortium, for a package totaling £1.02 billion ($1.8 billion).

A spokesman for British Airways PLC said it had signed a memoran-dum of understanding with Boeing Co. of Seattle for 24 short-haul 737s, six medium-range 767-300s and one short-to-medium-range Boeing 757.

The British carrier also reserved options on 11 more 737s, one more 757 and six more 737s and will take at least nine of them, the spokesman said.

The total value of the package includes the cost of the options. spare parts and spare engines, he

BA chose the Boeing 737, whose seat capacity ranges from 105 to 145, over the 140-seat Airbus A-

"Airbus presented us with a very attractive proposal," the spokes-man said, "but the greater flexibility of the Boeing option, compati-bility with our existing fleet and its competitive economics weighed heavily in favor of the Boeing 737, 757 and 767 package."

"The decision has been made on purely commercial grounds and will be in the best interests of our

British Airways was under pressure from the Conservative government to place its order with the Airbus consortium, in which British Aerospace has a 20 percent

Aviation industry analysts widely regarded the order as a major coup for Boeing over Airbus, a four-nation European consortium based in Toulouse, France, that has been lobbying hard to sell British Airways its A-320s. They said the order was also significant because it could influence other airlines. In January, the Airbus Industrie president, Jean Pierson, said that Airbus expected to deliver 68 of its A-300 and A-340 airliners this year, more than double the 1987 total of

The six Boeing 767s and one 757 ordered by British Airways on Friday will be fitted with Rolls-Royce engines. The British engine maker said in a separate statement that its part in the deal was worth £185

The 767s will be added to a fleet of 11 767s that British Airways has already ordered and that are due for delivery starting in late 1989. The first of the new 737s is due to enter service in late 1991.

"A purchase contract will be signed in due course, by which time British Airways intends to have obtained commitments for finance," a BA statement said.

The airline said the new order did not affect its existing fleet of A-320s, of which three are in service and seven others are on order.

In February, the chairman of British Airways, Lord King, said the airline would demand compen-sation from Airbus Industrie for the first A-320s delivered to BA. He cited excessive fuel consumption, saying the planes used about 9 percent more fuel than expected because of an overweight airframe and inefficient engine perfor-

$17 Million in Settlement

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches NEW YORK - Lamar Hunt paid $17 million Thursday to a Peruvian minerals trading company to partially settle a jury verdict that said the Texas oilman and his brothers conspired to manipulate and corner the silver market nine years ago.

The agreement between Mr. Hunt and Minpeco SA, which was approved by U.S. District Judge Morris E. Lasker in a 10-minute public hearing, takes the multimil-lionaire out of a bitter legal battle that began in December 1981. Immediately after the hearing, an attorney for Minpeco accepted a check for the full $17 million from Mr. Hunt's lawyers.

Paul Curran, Mr. Hunt's attorney, maintained that the settlement did not alter his client's contention that he did nothing wrong.

Court Bars Perot On EDS Challenge

Lis Angeles Times Service
LOS ANGELES — In a ruling that seemed to place a new computer services company owned by the Texas billionaire H. Ross Perot in legal lumbo. a Virginia court has barred Mr. Perot from competing for most business with Elec-tronic Data Systems, the company he founded and later sold to General Motors Corp.

The judge ordered Mr. Perot and his new company to cease "soliciting, negotiating for, entering into or performing any contract or other business relationship that contemplates or calls for any profitable return." But the judge said Mr. Perot's new company could solicit not-for-profit work.

The ruling on Thursday came after three days of hearings in a suit by Electronic Data Systems charging that the Dallas-based Perot Systems charging that the Dallas-hased Perot Systems had violated an agreement that Mr. Perot would not compete with EDS for at least three years after he severed all ties with GM in 1986.

Still, the impact of the ruling by a circuit court in Fairfax, Virginia, on Perot Systems remained unclear. Both Mr. Perot and EDS, which is also based in Dallas, claimed victory after the ruling. Mr. Perot argued that his new after the ruling. Mr. Perot argued that his new venture could continue to operate as it has since he founded it in June.

"We are very pleased," Mr. Perot said in a statement. "We think it is a fair ruling. Our customers and our prospects are delighted. And we look forward to getting out of the court and count held to work." EDS officials, however, said the ruling would force Mr. Perot to stop work on any profit-making computer services business. "He seemed happy, and we were happy, too, so we will have to see what happens," said Penny Pasquesi, a spokeswoman for EDS. "But me feel like well a ween."

we feel like we've won."

Mr. Perot's battle with General Motor's EDS unit represents the most heated clash between him and GM since his ouster from the automaker's board in late 1986. As part of his $700 million buyout that year from GM, Mr. Perot agreed not to compete with Electronic Data Systems or hire away EDS executives for three

But a loophole in the agreement allowed Mr Perot to start a not-for-profit company within 18 months of the buyout. When that deadline passed in June. Mr. Perot set up Perot Systems, hired a handful of top EDS executives and announced a new computer services contract with the U.S. Postal Service.

The postal contract was structured so that Perot Systems would not make any money until December 1989, thus, according to Mr. Perot. satisfying the terms of the huyout accord. He also sought to win the computer services business of the Texas Medicare system, a giant contract now held by EDS.

Ms. Pasquesi said the ruling on Thursday should stop Mr. Perot from seeking any more business contracts before December 1989 that, like the postal deal, are structured to defer profits. She said the ruling also should force "weere modifications" in the existing postal

Chief Executive Takes Another Gamble

By Doron P. Levin New York Times Service

NEW YORK - In the world of corporate takeovers, many chief executives resist having their company acquired

Not F. Ross Johnson, chief executive of RJR Nabisco Inc. Twice has Mr. Johnson found himself at the head of a company that became a takeover target.

In each case, he actively supported the takeover, willing to take his chances that both he and his shareholders would come out on top. In both takeovers, he lost out in the bid for the top job at the newly created company, but eventually ascended to the top.

Although RJR Nabisco is not currently the target of a takeover, the food and tobacco industry is in the midst of significant take-over activity. Mr. Johnson is displaying the same willingness to take a big gamble, but this time with a twist.

He and some other executives of the tobacco and consumer products giant are propos-ing to borrow $15 billion and take RJR Nabisco private in a plan valued at a total of $17

That act put the company into play as a prime takeover candidate, raising the possibility that should Mr. Johnson's leveraged buyout attempt fail, he will see his company taken over. And he could be out.

You won't see him blocking a restructuring to protect his own job, like at some other companies I could mention," said Emanuel Goldman, an analyst for PaineWebber, Brands Inc., Mr. Johnson might have seemed headed out the door when the company merged with Nabisco and he did not get the top spot. But three years later he took over from Nabisco's chief executive. Robert M. Schaeberle, who retired early.

When R.J. Reynolds took over Nabisco in 1985 for $4.9 billion, Mr. Johnson was again No. 2, this time behind J. Tylee Wilson. Less than a year later, the RJR board dumped Mr. Wilson and promoted Mr. Johnson.

Such risk taking is typical of his aggressive style, those who know him say.

Mr. Johnson is known as a decisive expert in marketing who can quickly shuffle divi-sions, staffs and product brands as well as

He will need all those skills as he attempts one of the biggest private borrowings of all time to accomplish the leveraged buyout. Just four months ago, the RJR Nabisco chief executive spoke in a magazine interview of the dangers of loading up on debt to "do a lot of short-term stuff to hype things." In an interview in Fortune magazine, he said: "If you get some down times the only thing that is going to hold you, preserve you, is the integrity of the balance sheet."

But recent moves in the food industry — Grand Metropolitan PLC's bid for Pillsbury Co. and Philip Morris Cos.' bid for Kraft Inc have indicated a willingness by large food and tobacco companies to pay huge premi-ums to acquire consumer brands.

So Mr. Johnson, ever agile, appears to be

In 1981, as chief executive of Standard readying a strong move himself, which would entail loading up on debt. If he remains committed to his belief about maintaining a strong balance sheet, he will almost certainly have to sell parts of RJR Nabisco to pay back some of the debt incurred by the buyont. In his three years at the top of RJR Nabisco, Mr. Johnson has specialized in movement. Workers have moved from one building to another and back again.

ing to another and back again.

The Del Monte unit, best known for its canned foods, has been reorganized four times and its headquarters has been moved to Corai Gables, Florida, from San Francisco. Analysts now think that unit may be sold to pay for the leveraged buyout.

He shocked old-timers when he moved RJR's longtime headquarters from Winston-Salem, North Carolina, where it was the cor-porate pillar of the community, to Atlanta. All this movement has given rise to grumbling by some RJR Nabisco workers, and admiration from many associates.

Stanley Katz, chairman of FCB-Leber Katz Partners, which handles some of Nabisco's advertising, described him as "incredibly intuitive," a quality he noted when Mr. Johnson moved the Planters auts and Life Savers candy businesses to Winston-Salem from New Jersey to take advantage of R.J. Reyn-olds's powerful selling and distribution net-

"He operates from the gut and makes some large decisions from the gut," Mr. Katz said. A lot of other executives demand lots and

F. Ross Johnson's leveraged buyout plan has put RJR Nabisco into play, raising the possibility that should the attempt fail, he will see his company taken over. And he could be out.

Acquisition Hunger In U.S. Food Industry

By Malcolm Gladwell

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — The people who make Oreo cookies want to go private in a leveraged buyout. The company behind Jell-O. Oscar Mayer hot dogs and Post cereals wants to buy Kraft cheese, Budget Gourmet frozen dinners and Tombstone pizza.

And the British company that makes Alpo dog food wants to de-your the Pillsbury dough boy.

Nourished by Wall Street's sudden conviction that the stocks of cookie bakers and frozen-food makers are undervalued, takeover mania has hit the $240 billion U.S. food industry. On Thursday, the management of RJR Nabisco Inc. proposed taking that tobacco and food company private in a lever-aged buyout valued at $17 billion.

The Nabisco plan comes hard on the heels of Philip Morris Cos.' hostile takeover offer for Kraft Inc.

Before it's over, some analysts say, such familiar names as Borden Inc. and Ralston Purina Co. may be gobbled up, and there may be big changes in the products that consumers find on supermarket

"What's clear from the past few weeks is that size is not an issue. said Nomi Ghez, an analyst with Goldman, Sachs & Co. "The industry is consolidating."

Of the dozen most profitable U.S. food companies, analysts say, at least six are potential targets for

While some major firms such as Kellogg Co., H.J. Heinz Co. and Campbell Soup Co. are probably untouchable because of the large percentage of their stock controlled by family members or foundations, others such as Sara Lee Corp. and Quaker Oats Co. share a number of characteristics that make them at tractive to investors. The first is stock price.

There's an enormous gap between present value and private market value," said Robert Renck. an analyst with Renck, Levy & Co. His estimates, for example, put the "real" value of Borden stock which closed Friday at $60.625 -

The second attraction is lucrative and well-known brand names Ever since Procter & Gamble Co.'s multimillion-dollar failure several years ago to penetrate the cookie market, the food industry has relied on acquisition and expansion of existing product lines to generate

John Lister, an industry consultant with Lister, Butler Inc. in New York, said, "What companies are doing is taking all the accumulated value in both recognition and image in a well-known brand and placing a dollar value on it on the expectation that they can make them more valuable."

One of the incentives behind taking RJR Nabisco private, for example, may be that the management team feels that Nabisco's prize Oreo cookie line is an underex-"Oreo is a very valuable brand,"

Mr. Lister said, "They'll probably go beyond the cookie shelf and into the ice cream case." This kind of product line diversi fication has disadvantages. "It seriously discourages product innovation," said Al Ries, a New York marketing consultant. "Companies are convinced that the only way to go is to milk an existing brand name instead of coming up with something new." Nonetheless, the lure of breakfast cereals and crackers with untapped marketing potential may be

Are Deals Streamlining U.S. Leveraged Buyouts Or Crippling Firms?

Now, Even the Biggest Are in Range

By Paul Richter Las Angeles Times Service NEW YORK — The announcement that RJR Nabisco's managers may seek to take the giant consumer products company private in a $17 billion deal that would be the largest U.S. takeover quickly rekindled a debate over the merits of leveraged buyouts, which have steadily increased in the past de-

The buge size of the RJR Nabisco deal - far larger than the largest completed leveraged buyout, the $6.1 billion purchase of the food maker Beatrice Cos. in 1986 — suggests that a new wave of enormous deals may be ahead, some analysts say.

"We may now be in a totally new league," said Evan Simonoff, managing editor of Mergers & Acquisitions Report, a New York trade biggest companies in America aren't out of range of the LBO."

in a leveraged buyout, the manpany assets. But to meet those payments at what are typically high interest rates, the managers must squeeze out as much excess cost as they can find. Often that leads to major corporate restructurings and layoffs, as they have in the restructuring of Beatrice, the 1985 buyout of the retailer R. H. Macy & Co. and the 1985 purchase of Storer Communications Inc., a diversified media company, to name a few. These companies are not required to disclose information on employment after they are bought out, but analysts speculate that hundreds have been laid off as operations have been sold or shrunk. Advocates of the deals argue that such steps are often beneficial to companies that have become overstaffed and spendthrift through years of heedless management. They say that when the companies are owned by their managers, the managers feel they have more of a stake and will work harder to make

Kraft, meanwhile, is reviewing a number of options before deciding what to do about the bid.

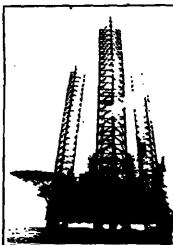

Five basic possibilities appeared to be under intense review by Goldan, Sachs & Co., Kraft's adviser: an effort to remain independent, the sale of the company to a higher bidder, a management buyout, a complex recapitalization of the company or some legal maneuver, called a show stopper, that would tie up Philip Morris in litigation.

One idea understood to be under review, according to people close to Kraft, would call for Kraft to issue a dividend so huge that together with the value of the stock after the

TWA Considers Purchasing Planes Worth $1.5 Billion

-Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches NEW YORK - Trans World Airlines Inc. expects within several months to complete plans to lease or buy up to 60 new aircraft worth as much as $1.5 billion, a senior executive said Friday. Mark Buckstein, senior vice president at the airline, said the TWA board had approved the plan in principal in July.

"Its something we'll do pretty soon, probably in a couple of months," he said. Mr. Buckstein said TWA was evaluating the purchase or lease of planes from McDonnell Douglas Corp., Boeing Co. and the Airbus Industrie consortium, but had not made a final decision. He also said TWA was considering buying from more than one manufacturer. Such a commitment would be the first significant indication by long-term investments in the airline to make it competitive with other major carriers, all of which are taking steps to rejuvenate their fleets.

A TWA source said the planes would all have narrow bodies and would replace many of the 220 planes in the TWA fleet, which are among the oldest in the industry. The effort would also reassure some TWA unions, such as the one representing pilots. The pilots have said in a suit against Mr. Icahn that he has done little to insure TWA's viability and cited failure to upgrade the airline's fleet. The union is seeking up to $500 million in

Spain Delays New Contract On Rail Service

The Associated Press

MADRID — The government postponed the awarding on Friday of a multimilliondollar contract for a highspeed rail service and ordered the state railway company, Renfe, to prepare a report on the impact of upgrading Spain's entire rail system. Renfe was to have named the winning bidder on Friday afternoon for a contract estimated at $850 million to build a high-speed train service between Madrid and Seville.

Press reports indicated that the French engineering company Alsthom SA was favored to win the contract over bids from a West-German consortium led by Siemens AG and another from the Japanese in-dustrial giant Mitsubishi.

MEMORIES AND HALLUCINATIONS: A Memoir

By D.M. Thomas. 195 pages. $18.95. Viking Inc., 40 West 23d Street, New York, N. Y. 10010.

Reviewed by Anthony Storr

M. THOMAS leaped to fame in 1981 with the publication of his third novel, "The White Hotel." Although best known as a novelist, he is also a gifted poet who has published no fewer than eight collections of poetry as well as translations of Anna Akhmatova and Pushkin.

Thomas was born into a working-class family in Cornwall in 1935. Although his psychoanalyst suggests that he was a lonely child who was never really part of the family, his parents clearly recognized his gifts and did their best to see that he had opportunities for their fulfillment. At the age of 20, he became an undergraduate at New College Orderd One of his tutors was writer. ate at New College, Oxford. One of his tutors was writer and critic John Bayley, whose "charming eccentricity" was clearly an inspiration. A degree in English launched Thomas on his way; and, until success as a writer made Thomas on his way; and, thui success as a writer mane any other occupation unnecessary, he taught English literature at Hereford College of Education and elsewhere. When not engaged in chasing his female pupils, he was, one can imagine, a refreshingly unorthodox guide to literature, for which, as he says, he has a passion. This does not prevent him from misquoting the title of Robert Frost's poem, "The Death of the Hired Man."

Thomas's autobiography, like his novels, avoids the use of conventional narrative. Some readers will find it bewildering to be constantly whisked from childhood to adulthood, from Wales to Australia, from Oxford to Washington, without any obvious reason or connecting thread. This apparent inconsequence seems to be based upon free association. Thomas's personal analysis appears as a recurrent intermission throughout the book.

There may be a secret coherence to this narrative which, although it eludes the reader, is obvious to the author and to his psychoanalyst. On the other hand, there may not. Subterranean connections, magical think-ing, and inexplicable but significant coincidences jostle together in Thomas's mind. He is also expert at pastiche and mimicry. Readers of "The White Hotel" will recall the accuracy with which he imitated Freud's style of writing letters, an accuracy so remarkable that, so he tells us, Anna Freud demanded to know where he had found

They will also remember the accusations of plagiarism
They will also remember the accusations of plagiarism
They will also remember the accusations of plagiarism
They will also remember the accusations of plagiarism Babi Yar. In this book, Thomas recounts his shock at what he considers calumny. Reference to the hardcover edition of "The White Hotel" shows that he did "gratefully acknowledge the use of material" from Anatoli Kuznetsov's book as he claims, though whether this quite covers the literal transcription of which he was accused remains dubious. The complaint of plagiarism was to be twice repeated, once in relation to his translations of Pushkin's noems and again concerning his accuract of the Pushkin's poems and again concerning his account of the Armenian massacres in his novel, "Ararat." One is left with the uneasy feeling that, in spite of his brilliant verbal skills. Thomas has not yet achieved the authenticity of a truly personal identity. Although novelists need to be able to identify themselves with a variety of characters, and hence to be less fixed or rigid in personality than average, they also need a firm base from which to view the world. Thomas's lack of inner coherence is to view the world. I nomes stack of timer concrence is reflected in his need to borrow, his expert mimicry, and the episodic, fragmentary quality of his writings.

As in his fiction, sex is treated at length and in considerable detail. Although tormented by sexual curiosity from childhood, he was 19 years old before he discovered how to masturbate. This early dislocation of designs. discovered flow to masturoute. This early unascention or sexual fantasy from any physical expression of desire may account for what appears to be Thomas's compulsive promiscuity, and the large part that explicit, anatomical sexual detail plays in his writings. As happens with a number of other writers, sex in the head becomes either transient infamation or sex on paper. For Thomas, as he admits, domesticity and sexual passion are irreconcilable. He tells his analyst: "Passion is vital, and I don't see how it can be reconciled with the familiarity of marriage: the wife washing her husband's socks, the husband seeing his wife in curiers."

Thomas is disarmingly houest about his neurotic symptoms: his phobias of spiders and of flying, his childhood fear of the dark; his propeness to depression childhood fear of the dark; his proneness to depression and his need to write to stave this off.

Admirers of D.M. Thomas's poetry and novels will find this series of autobiographical sketches both selfrevealing and entertaining. I find him a maddeningly wayward writer, but at least he is never dull.

Anthony Storr, a British psychiatrist, is the author of, most recently, "Solitude: A Return to the Self." He wrote this review for The Washington Post.

Merely Mickey Hatcher: Captain of the Stuntmen

When you play baseball the way Hatcher does — sliding on your face, slapping singles about and searching for a defensive position where you can hide - playing jokes on the manager might not seem too smart.

But Hatcher knows his place. And laughter is part of it. For most of his 10 major league seasons, his position might well have been de-scribed as "chemist," because aiding team chemistry has been one of s main jobs. Hatcher knew Lasorda would reraliate for the pants attack. Little did he guess, however, that he would order a young pitcher named Orel Hershiser to "hit that Hatcher right in the head, or you won't make the ball club."

"Yeah, Tommy'll deny it now." says Hatcher. "He's always saying. You're the biggest liar. But at least Hershiser yelled, "Watch out" and threw it over my head."

Love-In for Limas

By Ron Alexander Ver York Times Service

WEST CAPE MAY, New Jersev - in the seashore resort of Cape May, which is surrounded by the Atlantic Ocean and Delaware Bay, mid-October is synonymous with Victorian Week tours of grand homes, tulip-bulb planting, migrating birds and the last days to sit on porches in still-warm but

May, landlocked and noted for its lima-bean farms. Even the mayor of West Cape May, Jack Vasser, has a bean farm. But the biggest — 700 acres (280 hectares) — is owned by Leslie C. and Ernest A. Rea, brothers who are third-generation growers. Their large, meaty Ford Hooks have just been harvest-

It was only natural, then, that three years ago, when the West Cape May Business Association decided the time was ripe to give the borough an identity of its own, the highest-sprouting suggestion was for a Lima Bean Festival. Today, not only is there a National Lima Bean Association, which organizes the festival, but there is also a Society for the Preservation of the Lima Bean, whose goal is to call attention to the area's vanishing farmlands. The society's unofficial motto. said Bobbi Cherrelle, is "Fewer mini-malls, more limas!" Cherrelle. the society's founder, was the first Miss Lima Bean. She is married to Bill Bertenshaw, who is a radio and cable television producer. He, along with Dave Haha, a local contractor, takes credit for the festival idea. They were, however, unable to persuade the New Jersey legislature to name the lima bean the state's official vegetable. It lost to the tomato (actually a fruit). By late afternoon one dozen men and women — including Miss Lima Bean III; Santa Claus; Jim Chew, a truck driver; and Ron Collins, last year's champion bean eat-er — were sitting in front of bowls for the bean-eating contest. Each contestant was given three bowls —

This was the hot food competition, the most difficult and prestigious event at the quadrennial Culinary Olympics held at the Frankfurt Fairgrounds. Hugelier is an awardwinning chef participating in his third Olympics with the U.S. culinary team.

A pleasantly redolent haze wafted through Hall 8 at the fairgrounds, luring visitors toward the center of the vast room where six glass-walled kitchens had been set up.

Behind those walls, chefs from Ireland, the Netherlands, Austria, Cuba, New Zealand and Singapore busily prepared the main course of an elegant luncheon menu under the scrutiny of international judges dressed in white laboratory coats. The dishes ranged from New Zealand's double lamb cutlets Waitotara Valley to Cuba's boquette de vegetalos.

The cooks moved with choreographed precision, for a dropped tray of raspberries or a spilled stock pot here meant a disastrous loss of points.

While many of the world's athletes spent the past four years pre-paring for the Olympic Games in Seoul, in kitchens across the globe the world's culinarians were readying themselves for this Olympics. The competition, where 1,000 in individual and team competition was the centerpiece of the International Hotel and Restaurants Fair and International Culinary Art Exhibition, which drew fore it ended Friday. National teams competed in three main areas: hot food, where dishes are prepared from scratch; cold platters, and hot food displayed cold. Regional teams, sponsored by corporations, states, towns or organizations competed for individual and team medals in a wide variety of culinary disciplines.

more than 60,000 spectators be-

Switzerland won the overall title in the national team competition, with West Germany placing second and the U.S. third. The U.S. won the hot food competition, its third consecutive victory in the event, followed by West Germany and Norway.

Cold platters and displayed hot food were prepared elsewhere and then shown on elaborately decorated display tables. Singapore's display used as a centerpiece a hanging garden of flowers. On close inspection, the flowers turned out to be delicately carved carrots and leeks.

each other. "After we plot out our goals, I have everyone sit down and I tell them we are gentlemen, professionals and friend," Charvet said. "Let's have no fighting during the competition. While the right psychological blend is important, so is stamina. The appearance of the competing chefs seldom matched the stereotypical image of a burly Falstaff in the kitchen. Instead, most are fit, lean and young. They needed to be. The five days of competition were physically exhausting. Because of the time change, Palmer said, members of his team often had little idea of what day there are all the spectators watch-ing and judges moving about. Of course the chefs get nervous." Although teams and chefs competed against one another, the judging was free from the kind of politically biased decisions that rolled the athletic competition in Seoul. "The judging is very fair," said Ryan.

Every team manager interviewed agreed. Judges awarded points on a 40-point scale. Scoring between 36 to 40 points won a gold medal, 30 to 35 a silver and 24 to 29 a bronze.

Each competition, except for hot food, was evaluated by a three-judge panel consisting of the team manager of one of the nations and two senior German chefs drawn from the German Chef's Association in Frankfurt. Hot food was the only event where the food was actually eaten, being served to 15 judges and 150 members of the public. The hot foods competition was judged according to the impression of competence the food's presentation makes, the neatness of the kitchen, the harmony of the dishes and, of course, how they tasted. Winning the gold medal is the ultimate achievement, but the contestants main concern was seeing what other chefs are doing, what new techniques, ingredients, recipes or equipment were being used and how.

The cooks who are here are the trendsetters," said Dammert, the West German team manager. "It's an idea exchange for the cook's art.

Jack F. Braun, president of the American Culinary Federation said that "ideally, the Olympics brings the cooks new techniques and ideas that they take back and put right on their menus."

"This shows clearly in the philosophical change going on in cooking." Braun said. "In the past, much more emphasis was placed on form on the artistic aspects. While artistry is still important, now there is a high level of consciousness on nutrition."

Preserving the nutritional value nature put into various foods, while using them in innovative ways that satisfy the eye, is the current trend, experts agreed. Dammert's team introduced ravirned out to be delicately carved tition left little time for ego or time it is. "It's one week of your oli made from buckwheat flour at rrots and leeks.

'Caine Mutiny' Debuts To Ovation in Beijing

Charlton Heston, Herman Work and an all-Chinese cast got a standing ovation at the Chinese debut of Wouk's play "The Caine Muting Court-Martial." Heston used translator and sign language to direct the cast at the People's Art Theater of Beijing. The role of Cap-tain Queeg was played by Zhu-Xin, one of China's leading actors.

Sheamus Smith, the government film censor in the Republic of Ire-land, has ruled that "The Last Temptation of Christ" can be shown to audiences aged 18 and over but with conditions. He ruled that a statement by the director Martin Scorsese indicating that the film is not based on the biblical account of the life of Jesus Christ must be screened before each showing and must be display outside the theaters. No one will be admitted to the theater after the showing has begun, he ruled.

The rock group 10,000 Maniaca, which got its start in Jamestown, New York, said thanks by present-ing Mayor Steven Carlson with a gold record symbolizing 500,000 copies sold of their album "In My Tribe." Carison noted that the area is already known as the home of the actress Lucille Ball and the birthplace of the bird researcher Roger Tory Peterson.

Saying "I don't support cop kill-ers," Willie Nelson expressed dist appointment in a decision by all, police of Austin. Texas not to pro-vide security for his Nov. II benefit concert for Helping Our Brother Out. The Austin Police Association is protesting Nelson's participation in a concert to raise defense money for the American Indian activist, Leonard Peltier, who is serving two life sentences for the 1975 murder

A lawsuit filed in U.S. District Court in Washington contends that Henry Zapruder, a tax lawyer, should not have a copyright claim to the 8-millimeter film his late father, Abraham Zapruder, took of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. The suit asks that Zapruder be stopped from selling rights to the footage, saying he is charging up to $30,000. Zapruder said only people who use the film commercially are charged.
